

Alfalfa for Hay.

(San Francisco Bulletin.)

Formerly there was a very strong prejudice against alfalfa for hay, especially for horses. It was considered good enough for cattle, but too coarse for horses. The principal reason for this prejudice was found in the fact that we did not know in the first place how to sow alfalfa, and in the next place when to cut it and how to use it. Years of experience have taught us what there is in both these points, and now alfalfa is the best hay produced in California, if not the best produced in any other country. Alfalfa wants to be sown thick, at least 25 pounds to the acre. If sown this thick, and a good stand is obtained, the clover grows fine, the stem being tender and juicy, instead of coarse and woody. But even then it must be cut early, or before the seed begins to form. The best time to cut alfalfa for hay is before the blossom is in full development. This is not all. If cut thus early, and then not properly cured, the hay is greatly injured, if not ruined. It must not be dried in the sun, but as soon as wilted should be raked into the winnow and put into small ricks or heaps, to be dried principally by the air and without direct exposure to the air. Those who are going to sow alfalfa this spring will bear in mind that one acre thick on the ground will be worth more than two acres standing sparsely on the ground. If you have but a small amount of seed, better sow that on a part of your land and wait till another year to sow the balance. When once seeded it is almost impossible to thicken the stand by sowing new seed with old clover, from the fact that at any time the new seed would grow, that already on the ground shades it that it will not germinate. The sowing must be done well at first. Sow thick, and then cut and cure as suggested, and you will have the best of hay for cattle or horses, or any hay-eating animals.
